Promptness and punctuality are among the greatest blessings and comforts of life. For lack of these qualities some of the greatest men have failed. Most men have abundant opportunities for promoting and securing their own happiness. Time should be made the most of. Stray moments saved and improved may yield many brilliant results. It is astonishing how much can be done by using up the odds and ends of time in leisure hours. We must be prompt to catch the minutes as they fly, and make them yield the treasures they contain, or they will be lost forever. "In the youth the hours are golden, in mature years they are silver, in old age they are leaden." "The man who at twenty knows nothing, at thirty does nothing, at forty has nothing." Yet the Italian proverb adds, "He who knows nothing is confident in everything."

In the most ordinary affair of life we must take heed of the value of time, keep watch over it and be punctual to others as well as ourselves; for without punctuality men are kept in a perpetual state of worry, trouble and annoyance.
